Biographical Sketch.

Doris Schwartz was born in New York in 1915, the daughter of Florence Marie (nee Shuttleworth) and Henry Schwartz. She graduated from Methodist School of Nursing, Brooklyn, New York in 1942. Schwartz obtained her Bachelor of Science degree (1953) and Master of Arts (1958) degree with majors in public health nursing from New York University's School of Education. As part of her educational field experience requirement, she became the first American exchange nurse in public health in rural Sweden. Her contributions to nursing literature include landmark research, curricular innovations, and a strong philosophical framework for community health and gerontologic nursing.

Following her graduation from nursing school, Schwartz worked for the Brooklyn Visiting Nurse Association in the Red Hook district until she entered the U.S. Army Nurse Corps (1943) where she served four and a half years, including an eight-month assignment on the Marigold, an Army hospital ship in the Pacific. After discharge from the Army in 1947 she returned to the Brooklyn Visiting Nurse Association, resigning in 1951 to take a position with Cornell University School of Nursing and a joint appointment at the Cornell Medical College.

Schwartz served at Cornell for twenty-nine years as clinical instructor, coordinator for nursing in the "Comprehensive Care and Teaching Program," researcher in Ambulatory Care, and consultant to the Cornell Medical College Navajo Field Health Program. She was appointed associate professor of nursing for community health (1963) and co-director for the Family Nurse Practitioner (1972) and the Geriatric Nurse Practitioner programs (1977). Between 1955-1993 she wrote numerous scholarly articles, papers and books, especially in the field of gerontology, and firmly established her reputation as one who recognized nursing problems of patients and enjoyed describing and investigating them.

In 1980, following a stroke, Schwartz retired from Cornell University and relocated to Foulkeways in Gwynedd, Pennsylvania, and became associated with the University of Pennsylvania School of Nursing as a Senior Fellow with the Gerontology Nursing Program. Throughout her career Schwartz actively served in many professional nursing associations, professional organizations, and received honors and awards for her contributions to the health care field. Her book, GiveUs to Go Blithely, recounts her fifty years in nursing.

Summary. This collection spans Schwartz's professional life documenting her nursing experience and association with the Cornell University School of Nursing. Her earlier experiences are recounted in a series of taped interviews (both audio and video). The collection includes training and research development reports and grants and published and unpublished manuscripts. The collection includes a compilation from Schwartz's diary and her recollections from her fifty years in nursing.

Series Description. This collection has been arranged into six series:

- Series I. Personal information, 1917-1999
- Series II. Teaching materials and workshops, 1963-1999
- Series III. Training and Research Development Reports and Grant Proposals, 1955-1993

Series IV. Published and unpublished manuscripts, 1940-1998

Series V. Collected articles and books, 1922-1995

Series VI. Audio-video tapes, 1982

Series VII. Photographs, 1915-1994

Series VIII. Ephemera, 1945-1987

Series I. Personal Information, 1917-1995. This series contains documents of Schwartz's biographical information, curriculum vitae, awards and correspondence involving her activities with community and individual health needs. Also, there is a complete listing of published books, sections of chapters in books, articles and indexed book review lists of Schwartz's writings (1945-1984).

Series II. Teaching Materials and Workshops, 1963-1991. Included in this series are teaching methods, students reports, as well as Schwartz's activities with geriatric workshops both in U.S. and abroad, and associates.

Series III. Training and Research Development Reports and Grant Proposals, 1955-1993. This series documents Schwartz's involvement in research and training programs, such as Navajo-Cornell Field Health Research Project, geriatric nurse practitioners and family nurse practitioners, also the Faculty Research Development Grant Report.

Series IV. Published and Unpublished Manuscripts, 1940-1993. This series documents Schwartz's reputation as "One recognizing nursing problems of patients, investigating them, writing and informing others of the need for change." It includes address, articles, testimony, to editors, and her published book Fifty Years of Nursing (late published under the title, Give Us to Go Blithely, in 1990).

Series V. Collected Articles and Books, 1922-1995. This series includes books and articles collected and given to Schwartz by colleagues and friends. Records of Public Nursing, (1922), a rare British reprint of A Collection of the Yearly Bills of Mortality, London, 1657-1750, and "Foulkeways Bulletin," 1983-1995, are in this series.

Series VI. Audio-video Tapes, 1982. Included are four audiotapes and one videotape that document a series of interviews with Schwartz. These interviews were conducted by historian Susan Reverby and explore Schwartz's personal and professional experiences. Part of the Schwartz interview is on two tapes in the Claire M. Fagin Papers; see the Fagin collection, CSHN, Series VII, Box 30.

Series VII. Photographs, 1915-1994. This series consists of photographs of family members and individual portraits of Schwartz from 1915-1982. The remaining are group pictures taken during World War II, nursing school 50th class reunion, Schwartz's last class at Cornell University, School of Nursing and the University of Pennsylvania School of Nursing. Included in the series

Series VI. Audio and Video Tapes, 1982

Audiotapes of interviews with Doris Schwartz by Susan Reverby, 4 audiocassettes, 1982

- Tape 1 Family history which includes grandparents and parents; relationship with mother and brother; the Great Depression of the 1930s and its effects on family life; school years; summer camping from age 10 to 16; working years as a sales girl and taking evening college courses; and selecting a school of nursing to pursue a nursing career.
- Tape 2 Schwartz's experience following being discharged from the Army and prior experience with the Rehabilitation Army Hospital in Battle Creek, Michigan just before discharge; obtaining a college degree and working part-time for the American Journal of Nursing with editor Mary Roberts; and working with the Brooklyn Visiting Nurse Association's "The Red Hook Project."
- Tape 3 Schwartz's highlighting of changes within nursing from 1940s to 1960s; experience in the Red Hook area when employed with the Brooklyn VNA; educational experience in Sweden and with the Frontier Nursing Service; and Navajo-Cornell Field Health Project, family nurse practitioner and geriatric nurse practitioner programs at Cornell University's School of Nursing.
- Tape 4 Schwartz differentiates between hospital and public health nursing in 1940s; nursing education programs and professional organization as to their past and future needs; and spoke of her three foster children (one in Korea, one in Colombia, South America, and the third in New York City) in their twenties at the time of this interview.
- Tape 5 The National League For Nursing: The First Five Years, R. Freeman, R. Sleeper, A. Fillmore, and M. Roberts, produced by National League For Nursing, 1958

Videotaped interview of Doris Schwartz by Susan Reverby. Four VHS cassette tapes, 1982 (Note: see MC 95, Claire Fagin papers, box 22; Fagin tape I; Schwartz tape II).

These tapes highlight Schwartz's career as a nurse. On the first tape she relates her Army nursing experiences during World War II. She tells why she enlisted in the army, and then details the three different phases of her stay in the army-- first as head nurse of a forty-five bed amputee ward at Mitchell Field Hospital in Long Island, New York, which was a temporary hospital for soldiers returning from the war in Europe; when she was stationed on the Marigold, an army hospital ship that sailed the Pacific Ocean; and after the war as head nurse for eighteen months at Percy Jones Military Hospital in Battle Creek, Michigan, a 2000-bed rehabilitative facility for veterans of the war. During the first two interviews, Schwartz describes the everyday occurrences in hospitals during the war and the training she received in order to work at each place. For the third period, Schwartz relates the history of rehabilitative hospitals and the effects that this interview had on her later career.

Schwartz comments on the effects that the army nurses had on civilian nursing and describes trends such as the increasing specialization of the nursing profession along with the creation of new jobs (such as nurse clinicians) after World War II. Also discussed is the growing independence of nursing during this time period and criticism of this change.

In the remainder of the tapes, Schwartz narrates events in her life after the army such as working for the American Journal of Nursing under Mary Roberts while finishing her nursing studies at New York University. She describes being a part of the pioneering program that combined the Visiting Nurse Association of Brooklyn at Red Hook with the New York City Health Department's program in 1946-1947. She mentions receiving a Rockefeller Fellowship for a program at the University of Toronto that trained future leaders in nursing from around the world, and being the staff nurse for the ten-year Comprehensive Care and Teaching Program at Cornell University's Medical School, which trained medical students to become generalists instead of specialists. Schwartz discusses the innovative aspects of the program, its influences, and why it existed and eventually disappeared. Schwartz also describes her gerontology study of 1961 which was one of the first research projects done by a nurse on the effects of aging.

These tapes detail visiting nurse societies and public health nursing and how they evolved during the 1960s and 1970s. Among changes mentioned are the proprietarization of home care, the intervention of the government through Medicare, and the increasing administrative atmosphere of the visiting nurse societies.
