HOME HEALTH AGENCIES AND COMMUNITY NURSING SERVICES ACCREDITED BY NLN/APHA DECEMBER 1980
Unique in its design and purpose, the Accreditation Program for Home Health Agencies and Community Nursing Services is a voluntary process open to all such agencies, regardless of their corporate structure. It is designed to assist agencies in evaluating and improving the quality of their health care delivery systems. The program is jointly sponsored by the National League for Nursing (NLN) and the American Public Health Association (APHA) and is administered by NLN’s Council of Home Health Agencies and Community Health Services (CHHA/CHS).

An agency’s achievement of accredited status promotes national recognition of its excellence and provides a guide for prospective consumers seeking such services. Initiated in 1966 by NLN and APHA to fill the need for an effective evaluation instrument, the program accredits visiting nurse associations, units of health departments, combinations of visiting nurse associations and health department services, hospital-based home care programs, and private agencies. The program’s national standards are formulated by the Accreditation Standards Committee, comprised of representatives of those disciplines that provide out-of-institution health and personal care services.

An agency seeking accreditation must submit a comprehensive self-study report based on the Criteria and Standards Manual. A site visit to validate the report then is made by a community/home health consultant from the CHHA/CHS staff and an agency administrator of a comparable, accredited agency located in a different state.
The determination to grant or withhold accreditation is made by a Board of Review comprised of community health nurse executives, other agency administrators, physicians, other health professionals, and representatives of agency governing boards. The peer board's decision is based on: a study of the agency's and peer visitors' reports; an evaluation of the agency's activities in relation to the criteria and standards; the agency's stated purpose and its attempts to meet the health needs of the community it serves. The criteria and standards are applied flexibly and are not intended to standardize all community agencies or services. An agency dissatisfied with the board's decision is granted the right of appeal.

Continuance as an accredited home health agency or community nursing service is subject to periodic review and site visits. The minimum requirements are an interim report three years after accreditation has been granted and a new self-study report and site visit every five years.

At present there are 106 accredited home health agencies and community nursing services. Anyone interested in further information on the accreditation process should request it from the Division of Home Health Agencies and Community Health Services, NLN.
