INTRODUCTION

Educational preparation for practice as a registered nurse (RN) is available in a variety of settings for several fundamental reasons, the most important of which are:

- To enable nursing to fulfill its commitment to serve humanity by providing the best possible nursing care to patients and their families.
- To attract into nursing a maximum number of men and women with different interests, abilities, goals and educational preferences.
- To meet the nation's constantly changing nursing needs.

One of the settings for preparation is the school that offers a diploma program in nursing. This type of school, under the control of a hospital or in some instances independently incorporated, occupies a significant position in preparing registered nurses to meet the current and the future needs of society. The diploma program in nursing serves the interests and the goals of qualified high school graduates who desire an education in a program that is primarily centered in a community institution dedicated to the care of patients, and who want an early and continuing opportunity to be with patients and with other health personnel who provide services to patients and families.

The diploma program in nursing prepares an individual, eligible for licensure as a registered nurse, to function as a beginning practitioner in acute, intermediate, long-term, and ambulatory health care facilities. Diploma programs vary in length from one to three years.

This pamphlet gives general information about diploma education for nursing, explains the importance of selecting a school that offers an accredited program, and lists the diploma programs accredited by the National League for Nursing (NLN) together with specific information about each program.

Diploma Education for Nursing

Only through exploration of the distinctive characteristics of this type of program can you, the prospective student in nursing, determine if it is the one best suited to your interest and goals in nursing. A number of characteristics typify the education provided in an NLN-accredited diploma program in nursing:

- The primary purpose of the school is to develop the potential of students as individuals and as competent beginning practitioners of nursing in acute-care facilities and in a variety of health care settings.
- The school is in the unique position of offering a readily accessible clinical laboratory that promotes the student's understanding of the hospital climate and resources and the interrelation of other health disciplines.
- The school may enter into cooperative relationships with colleges or universities for educational courses and/or services. The school may also enter into cooperative relationships with health care institutions and agencies in order to provide learning experiences for students.
• The school provides the necessary educational resources, facilities, and services to students and faculty.

• The philosophy and objectives of the school give consideration to the personal and professional development of the students and serve as the basis of the development of the curriculum.

• The faculty, including nurse and non-nurse members, have academic preparation and experience in nursing, nursing education, and/or other special fields of interest that ensure a quality educational program.

• The faculty, utilizing trends and changes in education and health care, plan, organize, implement, and evaluate the curriculum within the framework of the philosophy, objectives, and policies of the school of nursing.

• The faculty are committed to the improvement of nursing education as it relates to nursing practice and the delivery of health care and have a unique opportunity to promote changes in nursing practice in hospitals and other health care agencies.

• Admission requirements include graduation from high school or its equivalent, with successful completion of certain prerequisite courses, satisfactory achievement on pre-entrance examinations, and a satisfactory assessment of personal qualities and health status.

• Students are given the opportunity to demonstrate the knowledge and skills acquired in previous educational experiences for course exemption or advanced placement in the educational program.

• The curriculum is designed to develop the knowledge and skills essential for beginning practice as a registered nurse in acute-care facilities and in a variety of health care settings.

• The curriculum includes courses in the theory and practice of nursing and courses in biological, physical, and psychosocial sciences. Learning is accomplished by applying scientific principles during the implementation of the nursing process in the care of individuals and groups of patients.

• Early and meaningful patient care experiences are provided in acute-care facilities and in a variety of health care settings which serve to foster within the student a strong identification with nursing and health delivery systems.

The graduates of diploma programs (1) are eligible to take the examination leading to licensure as a registered nurse; (2) utilize the nursing process, which includes assessment, nursing diagnosis, planning, implementation, and evaluation of nursing care for individuals and groups of patients; (3) have an understanding of the hospital climate and the community health resources necessary for the continuity of care of patients; (4) understand the role of other health disciplines and are active members of the health team; (5) adjust readily to the role of beginning practitioners; and (6) are eligible to change career goals and advance in other educational programs for the purpose of expanding the scope of their knowledge, skills, and responsibilities in the practice of nursing.
Plan Early to Reach Your Target in Nursing

Will you qualify for admission to an NLN-accredited diploma program? The answer will be yes only if you inform yourself of the specific admission requirements of several programs. If you are still a student, plan early in your high school career to meet those requirements. If you have completed high school, attended college, or have been out of school for a number of years, you may also qualify for admission. Select a number of schools from the list beginning on page 1 and write to them for their catalogues or bulletins. Study the requirements carefully and then enroll in the courses that are listed as prerequisites for admission. Strive to achieve the stipulated grade average and rank in the graduating class.

Other considerations in choosing the school for you are curriculum offerings and tuition and fees. It would be well to visit the programs you are considering and talk with nursing faculty members and students. If you need financial assistance, seek information about scholarships and loans from the school you finally choose. Also, ask your high school counselor to help you explore sources of help on the local, state, and national levels, or consult Scholarships and Loans for Nursing Education (Pub. No. 41-1964; $8.95), available from the National League for Nursing.

Why an Accredited Diploma Program?

NLN-accredited diploma programs in nursing have demonstrated their ability to attract and retain students, to recruit and retain qualified faculty, and to provide educational programs of quality. Priority is often given by employers to graduates of NLN-accredited diploma programs. The phrase “NLN-accredited” identifies for you, the prospective student, the schools that offer programs that have received recognition through a process of “specialized” accreditation. What you should know about the significance of specialized accreditation and how it differs from state approval is the following:

1. State Approval—The practice of nursing is regulated in each state by law. Each state and territory appoints an authority—usually a board of nursing or nurse examiners—to administer its particular nurse practice act. Approval by such an authority means that the program in nursing meets the minimum legal requirements set by the state for the preparation of nurses for licensure. Only graduates of a school offering a program approved by a state board are eligible to take the state examination for licensure to practice nursing as a registered nurse.

2. Specialized Accreditation—In the United States, institutions that offer educational programs in nursing and other professions are not regulated by a federal authority. Instead, an organization or an agency that is national in scope and represents the educational institutions and the profession is designated as the body responsible for conducting a program of voluntary national accreditation. The purpose of such a program is to ensure that education for the particular profession will continue to improve and that quality programs will be offered to students. This type of accreditation program serves as the means whereby the educational institutions themselves voluntarily formulate and apply criteria of excellence in education for the profession. The procedure for accreditation usually includes four steps: formulation of criteria; evaluation of the institution and the program of studies by competent educators; publication of a list of institutions meeting the criteria; and periodic reevaluations to determine whether institutions and programs continue to meet the criteria.

The National League for Nursing is recognized by the U.S. Office of Education, by the American Hospital Association, by the Council on Postsecondary Accreditation, and by the nursing profession itself as the national accrediting agency for diploma programs. The NLN-accredited programs described in this pamphlet are approved by individual state boards of nursing and, in addition, have met the national criteria.

NLN publishes an official and complete list of NLN-accredited diploma programs annually. The publication shows the date of the next accreditation visit.

Diploma Programs in Nursing Accredited by the National League for Nursing

The following pages present specific information about the schools that offer diploma programs in nursing accredited by the National League for Nursing. The information given was for classes admitted in 1988 and was supplied by the schools in response to questionnaires distributed in May 1987. The information in this publication, as in all publications of this type, is subject to change. As additional diploma programs apply for and are granted NLN accreditation, they will be added to this pamphlet.

For further information about any school and its nursing program, write to the head of the school for a catalogue or bulletin.
